Listed Below are services listed on campus that may assist you in your development into Appalachian State University's community. These can also be found at www.appstate.edu

University Housing

University housing provides students with convenient, well-maintained housing and foster a learning-oriented community that creates connections and opportunities for meaningful experiences.

Counseling & Psychological Service Center

The Counseling Center offers the opportunity for all currently-enrolled students to meet with a counselor to determine the most appropriate course of treatment, at no charge. At the conclusion of this interview, the clinician will recommend appropriate services. These services may be on campus in the Counseling Center, elsewhere on campus (e.g., Wellness Center, Health Center, Learning Assistance Program, Disability Services, Psychology Clinic, Career Development Center), or a referral to the community. Services available within the Counseling Center include individual counseling, group therapy, couples and family counseling, prevention, and the opportunity for outreach and consultation. We also offer a variety of services through the Peer Career Center. Health Services

The Mary S. Shook Student Health Service is a primary care ambulatory campus health clinic helping meet the needs of Appalachian State University students. Serving the student drives everything the Clinic does.

- We are dedicated and experienced health care professionals
- We provide accredited primary health care
- We are a centrally located, accessible facility
- We provide high-quality health care at low cost

We engage in ongoing collaboration with Academics and other Student Support Services throughout the university is unique when compared to food services at other universities. We are proudly operated by Appalachian State University (not by an outside, for-profit corporation, like many other schools) and we offer the University community complete meal service, as well as catering and vending. Food Services employs approximately 900 people. Of these employees, approximately 500-700 are temporary positions filled by Appalachian State University students. Appalachian Food Services receives no state funding.

Food Service

African American Spotlight Present and Past

Aliko Dangote

The CEO of the eponymous

Dangote group, this Nigerian businessman is the richest person of African descent in the world. Contributing to the development of Nigeria with the largest industrial conglomerate in West Africa, the Dangote Group employs upwards of 11,000 people, dealing with industries such as sugar refining, flour mills, food distribution, and cement. Also a heavy contributor to political parties in the region, Dangote's businesses account for one-fourth of the Nigerian Stock Exchange.

I got my start by giving myself a start.

MADAME C.J. WALKER

Madame C.J. Walker

Also known as Sarah

Breedlove, Madam Walker was the first American woman to become a millionaire for her own achievements. Experiencing hair loss at an early age, she experimented with home products until she developed a workable salve. Parlaying her $1.50-a-day job as a washer into a hair-care empire in only 12 years time, this fascinating 19th-20th century mogul is a true inspiration and pioneer for African-Americans and businesswomen everywhere. Walker used her money to forward anti-lynching campaigns and black education, dying in 1919 at the age of 51.
